Q. What is the focus of your firm?

A. As plaintiffs' personal injury lawyers, the attorneys and their legal support teams at Finkelstein & Partners represent people who have been badly hurt by the irresponsible actions of others. On any given day the type of situations the firm tackles vary wildly. Recently, F&P attorneys in the Hudson Valley represented two victims of exposure to toxic fumes in the workplace. Attorney Melody Gregory assisted a client who was badly injured because their sibling was driving distracted, and another team helped a client who sustained a traumatic brain injury when her dog was attacked by another vicious dog in her neighborhood.

Q. What can clients expect when working with Finkelstein & Partners?

A. While the firm's clients are from all walks of life, the attorneys and staff at Finkelstein & Partners treat each and every individual with respect and compassion. At intake, the process and timeline of each person's case is carefully and clearly explained.

Q. Are there other aspects of your firm that are important for clients and potential clients to know?

A. Since its founding in 1959, the firm has developed deep knowledge in handling complex catastrophic injury cases. Due to the extensive trial wins by the firm's lawyers, insurance companies often choose to settle our clients' cases rather than take a risk at trial. Our results of obtaining over $2.5 billion for our clients speak for itself.

Q. What draws clients to Finkelstein & Partners?

A. "The one thing our clients have in common," says Managing Partner Andrew G. Finkelstein, "is that they've been wronged, they're hurting, and they've come to us to help make it right. We don't and we won't stop until we can confidently say that we've obtained the highest possible financial settlement or verdict on their behalf, and importantly, have held the person or company who caused them harm accountable."
